"UM Football '69," which will feature new offensive and defensive approaches for this year's Grizzly grid squad, will get underway with a brisk opening workout Sunday at 1:30 p.m. east of the Harry Adams Field House.

Coach Jack Swarthout and assistants Jack Elway, Wally Brown, Bill Betcher and Ron Nord will greet the nearly 55 charges who are determined to bounce back strongly after the disastrous 1968 season of 2 wins and 7 losses.

Montana's 1969 team will dress up in full uniform Saturday for Press Day at 2 p.m. on the practice field. Earlier that day, the entire group will go through physical examinations as required by the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

Swarthout thought before spring drills that the newly-deployed Texas style offense would help his offense, and the spring game indicated that he may well be right. The running game was outstanding, and the passing game looked better than it did last fall.

Defense, on which the team worked briefly in the spring, remains the big question mark for UM Football '69. But three-a-day drills that start Monday should give the squad time to work on that end of their game.

NCAA rules require that players dress in sweat suits only for at least the first three days of workouts. This year's Montana team will don pads for the first time Thursday.

Three-a-days will feature workouts at 8:30 a.m., and at 3 and 7:30 p.m.

Swarthout said there will be a brief running workout following Press Day activities. Coaches are eager to see if the majority of their players return in good condition.

Alphabetically, known UM Football '69 candidates will be:
